Sex. Coffee. Time Travel. (Time-Frame) (Volume 2) Elle Brookes

In Book Two, Adventure-Romance author Lesley Meryn has her 'second date', a little bit of Time Travel, with the volatile, criminally seductive scientist Miles Sherwood. She wakes up to a spring day in 1765 Yorkshire. Miles should be there, waiting for her, but he's nowhere to be found. This is NOT good. This combustible couple have only just begun to get to know about each other, but Lesley realizes that there is a lot she doesn't know about Miles. And now she is about to learn more about herself in a time that is "Not an easy century." Circumstances spin rapidly out of control. Someone keeps trying to kill her new Eighteenth Century companion and self-appointed protector, Mick Kenning, a handsome and hunky stableman at the New Inn. Lesley helps him to foil these clumsy, but persistent and mysterious attempts on his life. As the days pass, Miles remains missing. The clock is literally ticking down the days. She has less than two weeks to find him or she may be trapped in the past. Has Miles fallen victim to the very real dangers of an earlier time? Complications multiply with the appearance of an elusive badass Highwayman. With a hefty price on his head, agents of the Crown have arrived at the New Inn to track him down. For Mick it's personal, he despises the Highwayman. The Highwayman, not satisfied with jewelry, and coins, stole away the woman Mick once loved. Will Lesley find Miles in time? What has happened to him? Will Mick ever find out who wants him dead? Will he ever find out why? Balancing between high adventure, sword fighting, fisticuffs, pistols, and daggers, Lesley must use her wits, imagination, and every trick from her own books to find Miles, survive the Eighteenth Century, and return to her own time. And ultimately, Miles and Lesley will discover, that in some cases, sex can take them places neither of them could ever have imagined.
