The Art of Touch Dominique Frost

Jared Hamilton is the director of the famous law firm, Hamilton & Hamilton. He's a brusque, no-nonsense type that doesn't suffer fools gladly. Thus, it is no surprise that he finds Kyle Washburn instantly and aggravatingly annoying.

Kyle is Jared's massage therapist and is cheeky and irreverent. Jared doesn't like cheekiness or irreverence. Unfortunately, Kyle also turns out to be absolutely brilliant at his job, which means that Jared can't find an excuse not to return to the massage parlor when Kyle's massages are clearly having such a beneficial effect. Jared is more relaxed and congenial than ever--well, as congenial as he can be.

It is only when another one of Kyle's customers implies having had sex with Kyle that Jared realizes that he, too, finds Kyle sexually desirable--and that the thought of anyone else touching Kyle is unbearable. This revelation changes Jared's perspective and his behavior, and he finds himself more and more attracted to Kyle with each therapy session. But does Kyle want him, in return, or is all that flirtation just part of the art of touch?
