BOOK EXCERPT

From the Major Themes section:

At the beginning of the novel, Balram mentions to the Premier that China is the only nation he admires besides Afghanistan and Abyssinia. Why? Because he read in a book called Exciting Tales of the Exotic East that these are the only 3 countries never to be ruled by outsiders. He dubs China the freedom-loving nation, a place that has never been subject to a master-slave relationship with the West. But although he hears on All India Radio that you Chinese are far ahead of us in every respect, Balram observes that China does not have entrepreneurs hence the Premier's visit to Bangalore.

China, then, becomes a foil to India, which he describes as a nation with no drinking water, electricity, sewage, public transportation ... but chock full of entrepreneurs. For this reason, Balram tells the Premier his story, believing that China and India are destined to become the next great superpowers. In 20 years time, it will just be us brown and yellow men at the top of the pyramid, and we'll rule the whole world.
